THERE'S NO WAR IN THE ROCKIES!

Hitler's a Pretty Small Peanut Compared with Mount Goodsir

by MARGARET ECKER

There's no war on top of the Great Divide and Hitler's a pretty small peanut compared with Mount Goodsir or Cathedral Mountain.

That's the way some three score Canadians and Americans feel about it anyway, and that's why they think perhaps they'll saddle up their little cayuses, tie their wordly goods with a diamond hitch to a pack pony and head for the Canadian Rockies until it's all over and sanity comes back to the earth.

They had a taste of sanity this summer. They savoured five Olympian days when life was boiled down to its lowest common denominator and only really important things mattered—like tonight's campsite and the gait of a stolid little mountain pony.

Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies—if they ever needed the lesson, which is doubtful—learned how to live from July 26 to July 30 back in the hills behind Banff and Lake Louise. It was hard to retrogress to civilization when the horses turned in to the home corral.

July 26 didn't promise anything red letter in the way of days. Clouds hung low over Vermillion Mountain, and the cargoes of the two buses which panted up the road from Banff to Marble canyon on the Windermere highway wondered vaguely to themselves if they'd brought enough heavy clothes.

Old stagers hitched up their denims, with the cuffs turned up the precise amount acceptable in western circles to show veteran cowboy boots, chatted chummily with their companions of other trails and other peaks.

Ochre Creek — the first refresher for the horses

Tenderfoots, feeling either overdressed in down-east riding clothes or conscious that their denims, boots and stetsons were shockingly new, stared out of the window and wondered if they could get their horse into their sleeping bags, supposing they couldn't get off at the end of the day's ride.

There was shouting and who-ing and klosk-klosk of hooves churning in the corral at Marble Canyon. Mixed with the smell of morning in the mountains was the good satisfying smell of horses and leather and buckskin.

Getting dudes and luggage mated to horses was orderly as a barrack room. A wiry, pleasant man in a wide hat, who turned out to be Claude Brewster, was calling out names of riders and numbers of horses.

From then on it was simple. The dude merely had to pick out his or her guide and his or her horse from 149 neighing, stamping steeds.

Usually the guide found the dude, then horse met rider. It was a moment of drama. The timid tenderfoot found himself looking into the eyes of a prancing black dinosaur of a horse. Gymkhana horsemen with a stable of hunters at home found their poor little cayuses leaning wearily against a tree.

Some of the guides were white and some were Indian, but all of them had a sense of humor, and there wasn't a dude born they couldn't hoist onto a horse in two tries, one way or another.

The horses got a whiff of the trail and coaxed with neighing and stamping to get a taste of it. Dr. Wesley Prowd, president of the Trail Riders, swung into his saddle and raised his hand.

"All aboard. We're off!"

The trail crossed Ochre Creek and swung away from the Paint Pots where Kootenay Indians once found their paint, and led through a wooded country where the pine scent hung on the air like incense. The moss was springy and wild strawberries bloomed among the bluebells.

Like boxers watching each other for an opening, horses and riders were tense as the road nosed into the mountains. Who was master had been decided on the way through the more rugged country, where the trail crossed shallow streams white with glacial silt. If man had mastered, the little pony put every sinew behind the uphill pulls and trotted briskly on the level to keep up with the pair ahead. If horse was master, there was a long break in the line as the four-footed actor feigned exhaustion with every lunge and the horse behind nosed his trail to get by on the narrow path.

Three hours out, and the wilderness closed in. They were a party of pilgrims alone in the most rugged pocket of the Rockies, where birth pangs of the earth had heaved rock and ice into jagged fangs which left tangled, fearsome gulches.

Once the trail passed the log cabin of a fire warden who stopped in his wood chopping to wave at the first humans he had seen in many days.

A little after noon when saddle-sore tenderfeet dropped against their pummels, Dr. Prowd plunged his horse across a swift stream and wheeled on an alpine meadow. Time out for the first meal of the trail.

In a whiff the cook, an old trail hand, had a fire going and coffee and tea at the boil. Sandwiches from a pack horse sprawled on a tarpaulin, thick sandwiches and meaty, and they disappeared in no time.

Too soon for some, not soon enough for others, the cavalcade was off again, winding in serpentine up the face of a mountain. When no one was looking, a glacier sneaked in and was there suddenly at the head of a sweep of rock. That was Tumbling Glacier, its head in the clouds, its white feet in the sand.

At lunch Dr. Prowd had pointed to a pass, high up on a range. "That's where we're going" he said. It hadn't seemed possible, but by mid-afternoon the trail was hanging dizzily on the shoulder of the mountains.

When the rains came the party had snaked into a shawl of trees and found what shelter they could. Clouds cleared for a while and just as the trail burst on Wolverine Plateau in the shadow of the palisades of the Washmawapta Glacier.

Most of the riders gave their horses their heels and burst into a gallop through fields of wild flowers, bluebells, crimson fire weed and a number of others.

As the trail cut in under the palisades, a cathedral stillness fell on the plateau and even the horses seemed soundless. There was only the murmur of nameless, countless waterfalls pitching down the rock wall and whispering like husky penitents.

Up the valley miles to the left, the sun was shining, dyeing the glaciers pink.

A news reels cameraman in the party unwrapped his equipment and took "shots" as the parade mounted the crest of the plateau. He was having fun, sending the riders up and down in all directions and his volunteer cast was having fun too, when the clouds burst.

Nearly everyone had slickers or puncheon capes which made them look like Zane Grey's mysterious riders. Photographers with cameras strapped on their backs had the sinister look of hunchbacks in sombreros. One woman sprouted a tropical helmet with green netting which somehow seemed to keep out the rain at that. Another tied a triangle of oilcloth over her hat.

A bruiser of a big black horse hadn't heard the rustle of oilskins on his back before, it seems, and broke into a pony tango. Tom LaBelle, the Indian with the face like a smiling stone carving, quieted it down.

During the next five days, Tom was usually there when a pony got fractious, and other guides and wranglers stretched along the trail kept a wary eye out to nip contingencies in the bud.

The plateau fell away to a steep moraine, dropping several hundred feet. At the foot was a grassy, wooded shelf, and among the trees were teepees, like an Indian village. Camp, and fire!

A little closer you could smell wood smoke. As the horses plunged on in the pelting rain, Carl Rungius, famous painter of wild animals, leaned down from his massive golden Palomina to tell how several years ago, on the Wolverine Plateau behind them, the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies was born.

Along rode Chet Ogan, the little wrangler out of Canmore, Alberta. His slicker glistened and rain dripped from his chin. "To think people pay for this!" he said. But few if any of the dudes were complaining. They were scrounging under big pines and larches to get dead, dry twigs and moss for kindling, or diving into the heap of duffle bags to find their own.

With a jangle of horse bells and a clatter, a couple of cowboys with lunches in pails herded the 149 horses out onto night pasture and took up their lonely vigil under threatening skies.

A big log fire blazed in the centre of camp, but riders took to their teepees, improvising clotheslines and hanging up wet clothing to dry in the heat of the teepee fires.

White men slept in teepees while the Indians solemnly went to bed in new pup tents. "It's like the bagpipes" remarked a grizzled oldster, "The Irish gave them to the Scotch, who haven't seen the joke yet. The Indians gave us the teepee".

But at that you can't build a chummy wood fire in the middle of a pup tent.

Life's really very simple and uncomplicated in a teepee. When you get to bed at night you roll up your clothes and use them for a pillow, and there they are in the morning, all handy. Sleeping bags are warm and cozy and the covers can't come off, no matter how you dream and kick.

When you feel the need you wash in a little stream from a snow pocket about fifty feet above you. To move on, you roll up your sleeping bag, pack your duffle and mount your horse, wearing nearly your whole wardrobe.

When the riders hit the trail in the morning, the pack train goes first, horses with contraptions like dog houses on their backs, covered with canvas. The cooks, keeping an eye on the horse with a dismantled stove on his back, and shouting cowboys, attend to the packing and breaking of camp. There's usually a rebel that wants to cut back to the corral, but they head him off up the trail. You don't see the pack train again until night, when you ride into a camp which seems to have been there for months, so snug and settled it looks.

The second day on the trail was a hard day, and the man who ate seventeen pancakes for breakfast was probably glad he had. The trail climbed the pass behind the camp and plunged into a dank valley, where moss covered the ground and crept up the spruce trees, and flowers red, white and yellow grew from rocks and around trees, like a wondrous rock garden.

The air was clammy with morning mist at the bottom of the valley and horses splashed through a grassbound muskeg. Then suddenly, thousands of feet up, and miles ahead were the peaks, like battlements of a rocky castle; was Mount Goodsir, its twin towers festooned with hanging clouds, in the blue and purple chromatic of the morning light.

Going was fair to middling hard for the next few hours. After the trail left the valley it struck sharply up a mountain face and plunged as sharply down again. A horse who had eaten hellibore on the Wolverine took sick and an Indian stayed behind, holding its head, while its erstwhile rider sat sorrowfully on a log nearby.

Once the trail broke out on a plateau ledge where the air was dry and warm. Across a gulch and a milk white river as a glacier, shaped like a cup, and holding the snows of the century like a chalice.

Lassoing a marmot on McArthur Creek

Further on, from a heap of granite above timber line a mountain goat watched the invading caravan.

On a plunging, zig-zagging path, so narrow in some places that some riders dismounted to lead their mounts, a pack horse slipped and crashed down the cliff. He rolled over four times before trees broke the fall. But his pack was bread and he bounced like a feather bed. The home stretch was the dried up bed of a stream and the horses made good time.

Camp looked pretty good that night. Teepees were set in a shawl of trees and the fork of McArthur Creek and Goodsir Creek, where they tumble into the Ottertail, and sleeping bags found good bottom on cushions of moss and pine needles.

After supper, down by the creek, a roaring campfire was built and the outfit sprawled on the beach as George Fisher, the yodelling cowboy, twanged his guitar and sang of cowboys, the hills and the faraway range. Alan Crawford, versatile accordionist, defied the riders to stump him and seemed to know the tune of every song ever written in the popular field. His "stomach Steinway" could skirl like the bagpipes, roll sonorously like an organ, or cry plaintively in the best cowboy tradition.

When stars came out and the logs were turning to red embers, Murray Gibbon, founder of the Trail Riders, who seems to have a speaking acquaintance with every trail in the Rockies, told tales of the early riders, of how the Trail Riders was conceived on the very Wolverine Plateau over which the cavalcade has ridden, how the King and Queen of Siam became Trail Riders, and how the organization boasted members in nearly every land.

When steaming cocoa was passed around by the cooks, and the night wind from the glaciers made itself felt, riders of Canada and the United States remembered their countries by singing first "America", then "God Save the King". To the same tunes but of different words, the anthems somehow had a strange similarity.

"This is the real America" pronounced a Chicagoan, "There's no boundary in the Rockies".

Fishermen were up before the sun next morning and by the time the main party passed them on the trail up McArthur creek several of them had nice strings of rainbows.

At lunch a creamy, hoary marmot, like a fat Persian cat, came to the party. One of the boys roped it, and the dudes got a close look while Dan McCowan, the Banff naturalist, in his rich Scottish tones, explained its habits. Then "Chet" loosed his lariat and it scampered away.

After lunch the Trail Riders saw Lake McArthur. With camp sandwiches and coffee as shock absorbers, they experienced probably the most memorable sight of the ride, a view of the green, shimmering, seemingly depthless waters of this austere beautiful lake aloof above timberline. With wind and rain in their faces, the horses fought their way up the steep pass. It was like scaling a wall which the gods had flung up to protect their rarest treasure. On the top the sleet cut into the eyes and the trail wound in a veritable "fly walk" along the mountain side. A ptarmigan with a half dozen oddly speckled chicks at her heels squawked and gawked at the intruders.

When riders shook the rain from their faces and looked up it was to see a turquoise tarn locked in the embrace of the jealous peaks. Mount Biddle at the head of the lake was gouged with glaciers like white cupped hands.

It was only a short plunge from there into camp on a grassy horseshoe facing a cluster of mountain pyramids against a backdrop of blue battlements tipped with fresh snow. That night at intervals the stillness was shattered by the thunder of pieces breaking from the glaciers and plunging to the valley floor.

Next day was "lay-over" day, which means the riders could stay in camp if they liked, go hiking, riding or fishing. Most preferred to hike, fish and ride, or do all three. Some rode over to see the beauty of Lake O'Hara and to climb into the rugged Opabin Pass. Others took a short hike to the Odaray Plateau which commands a fine view of a glittering panorama. Some made Lake Oesa and the Seven Sisters which hang in strange beauty above Lake O'Hara on the far side.

Marshall H. Diverty, of Woodbury, New Jersey, an ardent camera fan, spent most of the day with a telephoto lens photographing eaglets in an almost inaccessible nest, and seemed quite satisfied with the results.

All good things come to an end, of course, and the fifth day saw the riders swinging down the valley between Mount Cathedral and Mount Victoria. On the ridge above

Wapta Lake and its attractive bungalow camp, the hoot of a Canadian Pacific engine echoed from the valley floor and a long train could be seen scooting along the track remote and far away.

The horses needed no urging on the easy trail and they made the ten-mile stretch to Lake Louise "in high". Proudly the travel-stained riders circled the Chateau Lake Louise and took their first breath-taking view of the famous lake itself, then tidied up as best they could for the al fresco "banquet" near the corral by the hotel which preceded the pow-wow in the huge teepee where they re-lived the happy days on the trail and applauded their companions as they contributed to the entertainment programme.

It was a little sad and heart-breaking to be parting now when friendships so casually begun seemed so important, but there it was.

The Trail Riders had left behind them Canada's fine frontier, with its good clean air, its deep still nights, its gay companionship between rider and rider and horse and man.

So they came back to civilization where men rain bombs on the defenceless and torpedo babes in mid-ocean.

Perhaps when July rolls around to the Rockies again, most of them will want to saddle up again and return to the true civilization.

REGINALD TOWNSEND CUP

Trail Riders who took part in the 1940 Ride are reminded that a handsome silver cup was presented by one of our Charter Members, Reginald Townsend, of New York, for the best photograph taken on the Ride. The adjudication is made by three competent critics, none of whom is a Trail Rider, and a replica of the Cup suitably engraved is awarded to the winner, whose name is inscribed on the original. Prints should be sent to the Secretary-Treasurer, Room 324 Windsor Station, Montreal, Quebec, without any other identification of the sender than a nom de plume, the name of the photographer being enclosed in a sealed envelope, on the outside of which the nom de plume is written. The last date for entries is February 1st, 1941. The judges prefer prints to be submitted on glossy paper and of a size not exceeding 8 by 10 inches.

Ballad of The Ride of 1940

by MARY SIEBURTH

We started out for OCHRE CREEK
The sky was dark, the wind was bleak,
Although we glimpsed OLD SOL at times
We might have been in other climes... well... say... Vancouver.

The ranchboys and the Indian guides
Beheld us DUDES with groans and sighs
And looked up at the o'ercast skies
Then scanned our wardrobes brief, aside, and groaned and sighed again . . .

A comely maid in Beach attire
Sat straddled on a big grey mare.
A portly lad some fifteen stones
Atop a small cayuse bemoaned

1 AVOIR DU POIS.

And jodhpurred ladies graced the throng,
While some wore cowboy jeans, some longs,
But others wrapped in cellophane
Prepared for the expectant rain were virgins wise.

Then after much belated talk
Of what to take and what to pack,
Our stirrups fixed, and cinches tight,
We're off: we're on the trail all right,
the ford we cross...

And on we rode on doughty steeds,
Through forest glade and lush fireweed,
Full Sixty strong were we . . .
A glorious sight to see . . .

We passed where braves in days of yore
Did OCHRE take to paint them o'er.
The ladies vainly did implore
To halt, and see this place of lore and fill their compacts free . . .

But no . . . the menfolks stern of face
Thought we were foolish, and made haste.
VERMILION and OCHRE we leave behind,
And follow the tumult of TUMBLING CREEK
as meek as sheep . . .

We lunched on the PLATEAU and then off again,
I reluctantly state we got caught in the RAIN
Unprepared, we were soaked . . . and soaked again,
How I envied the ladies in cellophane . . .
alas . . . in vain . . .

At WASHMAWAPTA we circled around...
Paraded and stumbled, e'en sat on the ground
While the movie men bellowed and shouted and swore They'd ne'er seen such DUDES as we were before...
so camera shy...

O'er the WOLVERINE PLATEAU afar we gazed . . .
And up, at the WASHMAWAPTA PALISADES
No never was grander sight to see,
HANGING GLACIER, 'way up, right in the air . . .
near two thousand feet high . . .

At HELMET CREEK meadows our camp
we found,
With Indian teepees scattered around...
A smiling cook, and a steaming hot supper,
And big billies of coffee and bowls of clam chowder,
a feast for a king...

Then big SPOTTED EAGLE an Indian brave...
A stoney from Morley, with visage grave,
Did make us a fire inside our teepee
With chippings of wood... INDIAN FIRE says he... did it feel good?

The teepee got cosy... we closed the flap door,
It didn't smoke much if you squatted on floor.
With top flap adjusted, we hung up a line
Our soaking wet clothes dried out in no time...
believe it or not...

Then we sang by the campfire to musical strains, Such glorious camp songs... I can hear the refrain...
Composed by a Songster of C.P.R. fame...
Then... I'm blown if it didn't start raining again what a shame...

So to teepees and blankets we repaired for the night,
Tired out, but contented, a wonderful plight...
When a hot cup of cocoa was brought to our door...
So elated were we, we collapsed on the floor with kindness o'ercome...

On Saturday morning... July twenty seven...
We work up to find ourselves so close to Heaven.
That is... those who could sleep... there were those who could not.
But just listened and waited and welcomed the dawn... blessed morn...

Then after ablutions... of breakfast partcook
And packed up, then started again on the hoof.
We passed the TWIN TOWERS of MOUNT
GOODSIR allright
But found ourselves in a most terrible plight,
yes sirree...

We had passed through the meadows
With flowers all adorned. . .
'Twas a long time since breakfast
We agreed that upon. . .
Our noses were red. . .
Our lips they were blue. . .
Our tummies were. . . empty. . .
No lunch was in view. . .
We hearkened for water
The basis for tea. . .
I looked at my watch. . .
It was close to three. . .
ah, me. . .

MUSIC ON THE TRAIL

But down hill, and down hill, and down hill,
we dove...
Almost sitting on top of the poor horses' nose,
We zigged, and we Zagged, down, downy, down,
down,
While the GOODSIR TWINNIES, all parka'd and gowned,
smiled down... the big meanies...

At last, and at long last... when feeling quite weak,
We stop, look and listen... by jove, it's a
CREEK...
Our much belated lunch we eat...
And oh, it atsted mighty sweet...
of that be sure...

Regaled with cups of steaming tea,
We mount our steeds and wend our way
Along the banks of the GOODSIR CREEK,
The OTTERTAIL crossed we encamp for the night...
too bad 'twere not for a week.

A lovely camp we had that night,
Right on the banks of the OTTERTAIL, McARTHUR and GOODSIR roaring afar...
and the cool night air... and o'erhead the stars...
jewels of Heaven...

So we claimed our duffle and ate again,
'Twas surprising to me where it all could go,
Soup and spinach and thick Irish stew...
Of the cook, could be said... sure his onions
he knew,
too true...

We'd a jolly singsong too that night
Armand from Quebec sang "Alouette"
With accent lusty and actions strong
I dreamed of larks the whole night long...
Monsieur Lafreniere...

How we hated to leave that OTTERTAIL camp
'Twas peaceful and lovely... but on we must tramp.
And Sunday July the twenty eighth...
Found us wending our way by McARTHUR
CREEK...
how time does fleet...

A marmot, at lunch, Dan McCowan espied
Among boulders and what not the beastie did hide...
Till some ardent photographers plus a bit string
Hauled her out to expose her on Supper x film, F 11
at one hundredth — poor thing.

When zigzagging up to McArthur Lake,
(McARTHUR LAKE)
Like Lot's wife in scripture, I turned me back
To look, but I turned not to pillar of salt
For a blondish young lady with parasol gay, held high,
met my eye...

We camped that night at McARTHUR PASS
'Twas cloudy and wet, but what cared we...
Our feet by this time were developing webs
And by the same token, we'd rubberized legs...
tough guys were we...

'Twas ordained beforehand by the powers that be,
We'd stay here to fish and to play for a day,
While the more energetic did mount and away...
To view LAKE O'HARA and MOUNT ODARAY...
you just can't keep a good fellow down...

And then on the morrow, the thirtieth of July,
A smile on our lips and a tear in our eye,
We packed, yes we packed up for the last time,
'Twas with mingled feelings we fell in line
our breakfast to eat...

And we watched the pack horses, how patient
they stood
While the cook and his helpers packed stove,
pots and food,
And the ranchboys and Indians stowed dunnage
aloft
These grand beats of burden, we owe them so much noble steeds...

Then whinnying, off on the trail once again,
We pass LAKE O'HARA, yes, right, in the rain,
But lovely withall—in slumbering mood...
Then down past ROSS LAKE, another gem in the woods, Aurevoir...

And cantering on now in rain, then sunshine,
We emerge on a sight so divinely sublime...
A turquoise—in alpine grandeur set...
LAKE LOUISE—the loveliest yet
Opalescent LAKE LOUISE

The trail ride is over, we're in, every one,
With never a mishap, no, narry a one—Save that somewhere up yonder—'way up in the clouds,
I've lost part of me somewhere—'way up in the clouds.

Then after we'd eaten our supper, en fete,
We repair to the big tent for pow wow, tout de suite
And with speech making, singing, and big acts three
By a big burly Russian from Vancouver, I tank, or was him Chi-nee.

The pow wow is over, we've said goodbye
With many a handclasp and moistening eye,
But oft' in the Winter days that's to come We'll remember the mountains and creeks,
every one,
The flowers and the larch trees, the marmots
and moose,
The Indians and teepees, the ranchboys and cooks,
For the friendships we've made were the best
bar none
I've earned my bronze button, and my spurs
I've won,
So, here's hoping to meet you on the ride
forty one.
